Political Lobbying Policy

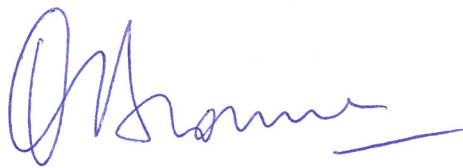

Lobbying is a normal, acceptable and useful part of the legislative process, provided it is conducted in compliance with all applicable legal requirements. Proper lobbying activities can educate lawmakers about John Laing Group plc's legitimate interests.

Laws and regulations governing lobbying or attempts to influence Government officials vary around the world; however it is John Laing Group plc's policy to strictly comply with all lobbying laws and regulations wherever we do business.

Where appropriate, we work with governments to share our expert knowledge and experience, in order to help shape effective policy making, particularly in the area of financing and delivery of public sector infrastructure.

We are open and transparent in our engagement with governments. We do not make donations to political parties; however where necessary we will employ consultants to lobby on our behalf, in which case the scope and standards to be applied will be clearly defined.

When we engage with governments directly, we do so in accordance with our core values which we as individuals, and as a business, reflect in our actions and behaviours. The John Laing Group plc Core Values act as guiding principles, influencing the way we do business, our decisions and our interactions with all stakeholders.
